

Black and mixed-race mothers

I'm Caroline Bazambanza and I am carrying out a PhD project at the London School of Economics about the experiences of pregnancy and motherhood for black and mixed women in London. This includes exploring care networks such as family, friends, the NHS, doulas, schools and community or other support groups.

For too long, the voices of black and mixed-race women having been missing from our understanding of pregnancy, maternal health and motherhood. I hope I can make a difference through recording the lives of black and mixed mums in London.

It would be a great help to hear from you about your experiences of motherhood and pregnancy.

This would be anonymous and I am happy to work around your schedule.
